

The Shortest Article in Law Review History

Erik M. Jensen

This is it.^{1, 2}

Erik M. Jensen is the David L. Brennan Professor at Case Western Reserve University School of Law.

I thank my colleague Arthur Austin for inspiration in the development of this article, and Arthur Austin and Jonathan Entin for comments on an earlier draft. Any remaining errors are mine.

1. A reader suggested to me that this article has insufficient legal content, that “Res ipsa loquitur” (or some other pompously legal slogan) would serve my purposes better. But it’s been decades since law review articles had to have anything to do with the law. For that matter, it’s been a long time since law review articles had to have anything to do with anything. This article has as much content as the other stuff in this issue, doesn’t it?
2. You think that, given this expansive text, you can write an even shorter article? Forget it. “The Shortest Article in Law Review History—Abridged Version” is already in the works.

Journal of Legal Education, Volume 50, Number 1 (March 2000)